St. Benedict said, "that to truly be a monk one must work with his hands."

July 11, Feast of St. Benedict, Patriarch of Western Monasticism

A solid oak door, hinged and held together by long metal straps, this door was refinished, hung in place, an entrance into a courtyard.

Brother Peter, Hungarian by birth, a craftsman with a workshop in the abbey basement, repairs and makes new for the monks.

He directed other monks in the heavy task of placing and pinning this oak door, installed in the 1920s, now ready for another 70 years.

Maintenance of a fine stone structure requires commitment of manpower and precious resources, both professional assistance and daily monk awareness.

Built of limestone quarried just south of our home town, Atchison, masons shaped each stone in the four stories, just prior to the Depression of 1930s.

In this home for work and prayer monks share with students and guests, with candidates and vowed members, being shaped like stones in patterned life.

Abbot Barnabas Senecal, OSB
